COOLIDGE IS PRESIDENT IN OWN RIGHT

CHIEF MAGISTRATE TAKES OATH ON OLD FAMILY BIBLE

Nation is Armed With the Cross, Not the Sword—Purpose to Merit Favor of Almighty God—Unnecessary Tax is Only a Species of Legalized Larceny—First Rule for Guidance of Citizenship is Obedience to Law—Precept of Liberty is Toleration.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

"America seeks no earthly empire built on blood and force. * * * The legions which she sends forth are armed, not with the sword, but with the cross. * * * She cherishes no purposes save to merit the favor of Almighty God."

"I welcome the cooperation of congress and expect to share with it not only the responsibility, but the credit for our common effort to secure beneficial legislation."

"The collection of any taxes which are not absolutely required which do not beyond reasonable doubt contribute to the public welfare, is only a species of legalized larceny."

"Unless we wish to hamper the people in their right to earn a living, we must have tax reform."

"The physical configuration of the earth has separated us from all of the Old World, but the common brotherhood of man, the highest law of all our being, has united us by inseparable bonds with all humanity."

"Our country represents nothing but peaceful intentions toward all the earth, but it ought not to fail to maintain such a military force as comports with the dignity and security of a great people."

"We cannot permit ourselves to be narrowed and dwarfed by slogans and phrases. * * * It is not the name of the action, but the result of the action, which is the chief concern. It will be well not to be too much disturbed by the thought of either isolation or entanglement of pacifists and militarists."

Washington, March 4 (UP.)—America's responsibility to lead the world to permanent peace and prosperity was proclaimed by President Coolidge in his inaugural address today as the paramount duty facing the nation.

The United States isolated alike in its prosperity, its independence and its power, must recognize the obligation imposed by this exceptional position, he declared.

In his address, delivered in the traditional place before the great dome of the capitol, but by the magic of the radio carried far beyond the thousands who had gathered to hear him, to millions thruout the country, the president preached a gospel of international cooperation and domestic economy with a fervor that was at times deeply religious.

The president reemphasized governmental economy and tax reduction as the basic internal policies of his administration. The cost of government he said, should be cut before government became more of a burden than a protection to the people. Tax reduction he declared was not only economically desirable but an inherent right to which the citizens of state and nation were entitled.

World leadership in the struggle to advance universal prosperity and peace devolves naturally upon the United States, the president pointed out, because among all the nations the United States is the most favorably situated.

Outlining specific ways in which the United States could properly exert its vast influence, the president advocated adherence to the World Court, the holding of frequent international conferences such as those which resulted in the Dawes plan and the Paris agreement, continued endeavors to limit armaments, economic and financial assistance to less favored peoples and the codification of international law.

President Coolidge stressed the principle that this country could only be permanently prosperous if other countries also attained a measure of prosperity. He urged therefore that the first aim of the United States in its foreign relations should be to assist other countries.

He did not refer to the league of nations or to debts. But this country's traditional isolation, he said, should only go so far as to keep this nation withdrawn from political affairs of Europe while cooperating in every practical way which might promote peace and prosperity.

In discussing the world court he advocated this country's adherence in stronger terms than he has ever previously used.

"We cannot barter away our independence or our sovereignty," he said, "but we ought to engage in no refinements of logic, no sophistries and no subterfuges, to argue away the undoubted duty of this country by reason of the might of its numbers the power of its resources and its position of leadership in the world, actively and comprehensively to signify its approval and to bear its full share of the responsibility of a candid and disinterested attempt at the establishment of a tribunal for the administration of even-handed justice between nation and nation. The weight of our enormous influence must be cast upon the side of a reign not of force, but of law and trial, not by battle, but by reason."

In discussing domestic affairs Mr Coolidge set governmental economy and tax reduction above all the other aims of his administration. Outlining his general political philosophy he vigorously defended the principles of party government division of powers, party responsibility, power of the courts and majority rule while he just as vigorously condemned government ownership and radical constitutional changes. These principles he declared

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Cabbage and Tubers Affect Milk Flavor

Fed Immediately After the Milking Not Harmful.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Cabbage and potatoes, though not grown generally for dairy feeds, are often fed to dairy cows to supply succulence in the ration and to dispose more economically of these products during periods of low prices. Like other succulent feeds they tend to affect the milk with undesirable flavors and odors when fed under certain conditions of quantity and time.

In order to determine the amounts of these feeds that may be fed, as well as the time of feeding, without affecting the flavor of the milk, the United States Department of Agriculture conducted a number of tests, the results of which have just been published in Department Bulletin 1297.

From these tests it is concluded that dairy cows may be fed as much as 24 pounds of cabbage immediately after milking without imparting any objectionable flavors or odors to the milk. On the average, however, the feeding of 14.3 pounds of cabbage within one hour before milking will cause objectionable flavors in the milk, and an increase in the amount of cabbage fed will intensify the flavors produced. Proper aeration, however, will reduce strong abnormal flavors to some extent, and some of the slightly abnormal flavors may be eliminated.

When dairy cows consume an average of 14.8 pounds of potatoes one hour before milking, slightly abnormal flavors and odors may be produced in the milk. They are slight, however, and would seldom be perceived by the average consumer. Increasing this amount to as high as 28.7 pounds does not increase the abnormal flavors. That amount may be fed immediately after milking with no effect whatever on the flavor of the milk.

A copy of this bulletin may be secured free of charge, while the supply lasts, from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Thorough Study of Oil Emulsion as Insecticide

A thorough study of oil emulsions for use as insecticides has been begun by the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture during the past year, and important progress has been made, especially toward increasing the stability of emulsions in hard water and lime-sulphur solutions. The investigation of miscellaneous insecticides has been continued at the laboratories in Washington and at the nearby field station at Silver Spring, Md., and cooperative tests on a commercial scale are made by the Washington laboratories and various field stations on new or improved preparations. What appears to be a new contact insecticide which will in many instances be a suitable substitute for nicotine at a lower cost has been developed by two offices of the bureau co-operatively. This insecticide mixes well with oil emulsions and, it is believed, will make an excellent spray for the delayed dormant treatment for the simultaneous control of the San Jose scale and apple aphids.

Inoculate Alfalfa Seed

Be sure to inoculate your alfalfa seed. Alfalfa culture for inoculation can be procured from most of the agricultural colleges at a very small cost and is absolutely necessary for a good stand. Do not attempt to grow alfalfa either on slough or land where water frequently lies for considerable time as it will partially, if not wholly, be killed out after the water disappears.

It is more a question of cultivation than soil, as the land must be thoroughly worked up, giving it a final weed-killing harrowing right before seeding.

Generally wheat land will make excellent alfalfa soil, unless it happens to be underlaid with hardpan.

Farm Hints

Legumes swell profits.

Denmark, one-third the size of New York, had 5,000 co-operative associations in 1920.

Jack Frost will provide much comfort next summer if you will provide a storage for his products now.

If we may judge from the trend of public sentiment, the time may not be far distant when those who will not grade their products will not sell them.

A large number of cattle die every year from cornstalk disease. Veterinarians say there is no treatment for the disease. They suggest that overly hungry cattle should not be turned into cornstalks because they are affected quicker. Feed the animals some hay every morning before they are turned out.

Cruel Way to Fish

Chippewa Indians have a way all their own of fishing, and while it is cruel it usually nets results. They use live squirrels for bait. They fasten the squirrel on a hook with line and then row out in the lake and throw it overboard. The squirrel, in its agony, stirs up the water and attracts the big fish. One makes a dash and gulps it down and the Indian then proceeds to land his catch. The usual way will do for us. That's cruel enough.

Hair Denoted Power

There was a deep-rooted belief among the ancient peoples of the East that a man's glory was his beard. Compulsory shaving and the close cropping of hair were signs of degradation. This is borne out by Assyrian sculptures, which always show kings with beards and long hair, and slaves with close-cropped hair and clean-shaven faces.

Pleasant Substitute!

It was at a meeting of the British Medical association, and he was explaining how he had managed for vitamins at the time of the butter shortage during the war. "There wasn't enough butter to go round," he explained, "so my wife and I divided the family rations between us and gave the children cod-liver oil instead. It was ever so much better for them, for, as you know, it is far richer in fat soluble A."

Telephonic Requirements

Requirements for the manufacture of one year's supply of telephone cable in the United States include 129,000,000 pounds of lead, 1,200,000 pounds of antimony, 66,000,000 pounds of copper, and 12,000,000 pounds of paper. These materials are sufficient to produce 63,000,000 feet of cable, enclosing 30,000,000,000 feet of wire.

One Word of Praise!

It does happen. A lady called up and commenced to tell the editor something about something in the paper. It was in commendation of an article he had written. That was why the telephone trouble man had to come around and hang up the receiver for him.—Aurora Advertiser.

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material-that is lasting, and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. Silk Promises to Be Season's Mode

Dealers Are Showing Interest in New Varieties of Favored Fabric

In this year's southern fashions are designs without number that indicate a certain conventionality in dress that has lately been lacking, writes a fashion correspondent in the New York Times. They represent much art, originality and charm, much that is strikingly stylish. Some of the style is a matter of line and composition, some is a matter of color. Most important of all is material.

This season's fabrics are in themselves an interesting subject. It is quite certain that this is to be a silk season. The largest dealers spend more time and genius in new varieties, patterns and weaves of silk than they have shown in years before. Many kinds of silk goods have never before been presented.

The latest type of silk is something far in advance artistically of last season's offerings. Ferronniere (iron-work) silks are the conspicuous novelty, in pattern and weave as well as in name. They are the creation of Edgar Brandt, a Frenchman, who has adapted to the printing of silk the designs we see in ornamental iron work, fire-screens, gates, the doors and windows of the old cathedrals in France.

Among the distinguished examples of his artistry is the iron work of the stairways in the Louvre. The French government commissioned M. Brandt to do the ornamental iron setting of the tomb of the unknown soldier.

In these designs the motifs are scrolls, figures and geometric patterns. They are worked into a flat surface ornamentation with surprising symmetry and proportion, and are printed on crepe and silk in the very newest colors.

Apart from these unique ferronniere prints, there are many new and altogether delightful designs. Polka dots are to have a vogue. Not the evenly spaced, uniform size dots with which we are familiar, but many clever variants. Some dots are oblong, printed at equal distances, and others, oval in shape, are clustered according to size. Dots of every size are to be fashionable, the round dot the size of a dime or smaller, evenly arranged, being an especial favorite.

A novelty is a silk that has dots of two sizes, one quite small at one side of the silk width, graduating to large dots across the width to the edge. In making up the silk or crepe thus printed it is used with the width for length, and is shown by the importers in gay scarlet dots printed on white, in blue, brown and green on white. Blue and white—that clear, always smart combination of navy blue and white—is to be especially modish this season, first for the utility day-time frock, and later it will undoubtedly be in demand for summer.

Floral Pattern Novelty.

A conventionalized pattern is another among the novelties that is being very well received and is shown in some of the models from the most exclusive Paris houses.

Small flowers and figures are most popular. Those in the new colors, orange, red, blue and green, printed on white crepe, have an indescribably dainty Dresden effect.

One of these small flowered patterns is treated in a unique fashion, the border idea being the general scheme. That half of the width which will make up the bottom of the skirt of tunic has a background of dark blue with fine lines of white running diagonally at inch-wide intervals. On this area is stamped the little block flowers of red brown and mauve, with green leaves.

On the other half of the silk width, the background of which is corn yellow, is printed the same pattern of conventionalized flowers.

The new scheme of colors, distinctly Spanish, in harmonies of red, yellow and brown, is shown in some of the best ferronniere prints. One that is no end smart has a ground of ivory crepe, on which the scroll pattern is printed in a red brown that the French call "burnt bread." At the very edge of this all-over design is a three-inch border of delicate fretwork stamped in gray and black.

On another white crepe roman a large diagonal diamond pattern is formed with narrow stripes in lattice work of black and blue.

A distinctive feature of the season's materials is the plain ribbed silks. These are shown in the crepe satin, crepe roman, bengaline and a pretty new variety, called foille de soie, similar to radium. All of these new silks and the different crepes are artistic and charming in themselves. As they are presented in the late models they are delightful, especially in the new combinations of plain and figured materials.

All of the prominent couturiers in Paris have designed an assortment of these silk frocks seen at the southern resorts. One creator of advanced ideas is Goupy, whose models are shown in an ultra-exclusive shop, his favorite scheme being the two-piece frock.

Usually the skirt or the slip is made of plain crepe or a crepe in plain color with printed border, plaited very fine. The blouse, which is a straight or belted affair, is done in one of the printed crepes. A variant of this model has a skirt of the patterned crepe roman in a small floral design, the overblouse, almost knee length, being of plain goods piped with a color to accentuate one note in the skirt.

Woolens Copy Ribbed Silk.

The togs that are required to make a proper appearance on out-of-doors occasions at the southern resorts are quite as engaging as this season's more elaborate dress. Some of the lightweight woolens appear to copy the ribbed silks, and the finer varieties of flannel are grateful in feeling and exceedingly smart.

These are presented in models of two sorts. One is the modish sports suit, that is showy and gay, extravagant and picturesque in its scheme of decoration in lighter weight and colors, though less athletic in character, of the suits that one sees at the winter sports resorts.

Then, again, white is now, as always, the predominating note of the southern Riviera wardrobe, and much red appears. Suit after suit in light woven wool is made of white, with pipings, bindings or narrow borders of scarlet.

One of the smartest ensembles seen lately was designed for Palm Beach, of pearl gray wool bengaline with an inch-wide binding of red silk and coat lining in the same shade. A tiny gray felt hat in the new soft cloche shape had a band of gray grosgrain ribbon about the crown, tied in a bow toward the back at one side.

The frocks and suits of attractive combinations are exceedingly modish at the moment, but there is in many of the late models a decided tendency to simplicity. Some of the newest things are self-trimmed, of one color from collar to hem.

If it is possible to specify one kind of dress that will prevail at the resorts it should be the two-piece frock, and the one indispensable garment, the tunic blouse. Much will be seen of these all through the summer, after the establishing of their vogue by the chic women who wear them in the South.

Attention to Evening Dress.

Of the French authorities on dress who have done particularly attractive things suitable for southern wear is Jean Patou, who gives especial attention to evening dress. His favorite material is always something of the nature of marquisette, which is exceedingly popular this season. He cuts his skirts circular in shape and uses lightly bands of silver or crystal and often a garniture of flowers.

In his latest dance frock models Patou introduces impartially fringe, feathers and lace. Needlework, particularly the bright-colored wool embroidery of the peasant type, is shown on some of the lightest wool crepe frocks, and the lingerie gown in all its dainty, fragile distinction is growing in a revived popularity.

143 American Divorces, Paris Record for 1923

Paris.—American divorces granted in the Paris courts during 1923 numbered 143 out of a total of 7,064.

While the percentage of American divorces as regards the total number seems relatively small, it is much more important when one considers that all the divorces obtained by other foreigners of all nationalities during 1923 amounted to only 151.

The present legislation in France provides that in the application for divorces emanating from American citizens the laws of the various states in which they live in the United States shall apply.

DARBYVILLE W. C. T. UNION.

The Frances E. Willard February 18, meeting met at the home of Mrs. George Miller. Rev. Mr. Harball led the devotional. Everyone was glad he was at the meeting.

Mrs. Christena Hill read the leaflet The Benefits Derived from the Frances E. Willard Fund. Truly the fund is far reaching and we are glad the Darbyville Union always sends $2 to the fund each year. Mrs. Bernice Ginder read, A stronger National Sentiment is Needed, a saying of Frances E. Willard. Let us give a generous thank offering for her great leadership and her love for all. Mrs. Pauline Flowers read, Frances Willard's Great Ambition to Serve. One of her great desires was to unite the womanhood of the world. Miss Willard's sayings were read by the Union. Rev. Harball talked about Miss Willard's ability to do things and it was enjoyed by all.

Mrs. Miller assisted by Miss Hott served delightful refreshments. Our next meeting will be Wednesday afternoon, March 11, at 2 o'clock with Mrs Wilda Carpenter and daughter, Mrs. Pauline Flowers. Our program will be: Prayer, Conquerors, by Mrs. Mary Harris Armen; also noontide hour of prayer by Mrs. Elizabeth P. Gorden. The Widow's mite or what shall I render and how, Mrs. Helen Hyde Carlson. Every member is urged to be at the meeting Wednesday, March 11, at 1:30.

PICKAWAY P. T. A.

A delightful patriotic program was enjoyed by the Parent-Teacher association of the Pickaway township school last Friday afternoon.

The members at this meeting decided to pay the ten cent membership fee and become a confederated, state organization.

The hot lunch project made possible thru the initiative of the association, has proven a decided success. At the minimum cost of ten cents a satisfying lunch has been served to the pupils each day and thus far has been more than self-supporting. Special credit is due the president of the association, Mrs. J. L. Young, Mrs. Cora Hood and Superintendent A. F. Cameron in conducting this project.

Cleveland, March 4—Officials of three counties and an Ohio National Guard unit are aiding in the search of Theodora O'Donnell, 16, Cleveland high school girl missing since early yesterday.

Work While at Work.

It's a good thing not to take your hobbies to the office. It's also a good thing to dispense with easy chairs and other luxuries in your place of business. Take the rest cure at home. The office is a place of toil. It should be comfortable, but its appointments should be suggestive of work and efficiency rather than leisure. Instead of making a man feel like taking a nap the office environment should be an urge to his best efforts.

had been supported "by a very clear and definite mandate from the people" in the last election.

"When we turned from what was rejected to inquire was accepted", he continued, discussing the meaning of the election, "the policy that stands out with the greatest clearness is that of economy in public expenditure with reduction and reform of taxation.

"The principle involved in this effort is that of conservation. The resources of this country are almost beyond computation. No mind can comprehend them. But the cost of our combined governments is likewise almost beyond definition.

"Not only those who are now making their tax returns, but those who meet the enhanced cost of existence in their monthly bills, know by hard experience what this great burden is and what it does. No matter what others may want these people want a drastic economy.

"I favor the policy of economy, not because I wish to save money but because I wish to save people. Every dollar that we prudently save means that their life will be so much the more abundant. Economy is idealism and in its most practical form."

The president said the domestic situation at present was marked by the most favorable conditions. Industrial relations, he said, were "peaceful and prosperous;" employment plentiful, wages good and wage earners contented, "under the helpful influences of restrictive immigration and a protective tariff;" the railroads recovering; and that agriculture, tho "slow in reviving," had in the recent rise in the price of cereals indicated "that the day of its deliverance was at hand."

The president's address showed evidences of the long hours he had spent in outlining what he wished to say and then in reducing what he said to the brevity he so much admires. The typical Coolidge style reached in his address today new heights of epigrammatic vigor and precision.

As a guiding principle in international relations he said, "if we expect others to rely on our fairness and justice we must show that we rely on their fairness and justice."

Taxation above that absolutely required to run the government he termed "legalized larceny."

And in conclusion he declared, "Here stands our country, an example of tranquility abroad. She cherishes no purpose save to merit the favor of Almighty God."

In the course of his address the president outlined his views on most of the important questions now before the country.

Of national defense he said: "Our country represents nothing but peaceful intentions toward all the earth, but it ought not to fail to maintain such a military force as comports with the dignity and security of a great people. It ought to be a balanced force, intensely modern capable of defense by sea and land, beneath the surface and in the air."

Of arms limitation: "Removing the burden of expense and jealously, which must always accrue from a keen rivalry, is one of the most effective methods of diminishing that unreasonable hysteria and misunderstanding which are the most potent means of fostering war."

Party regularity: "Common honesty and good faith with the people who support a party at the polls require that party, when it enters office, to assume the control of that portion of the government to which it has been elected."

Taxes: "The time is arriving when we can have further tax reduction, when, unless we wish to hamper the people in their right to earn a living we must have tax reform."

Law enforcement: "In a republic the first rule for the guidance of the citizen is obedience to law."

Congress: "In spite of all the criticism which often falls to its lot, I do not hesitate to say that there is no more independent and effective legislative body in the world."

Religious freedom: "The fundamental precept of liberty is toleration. We cannot permit any inquisition either within or without the law to apply any religious test to the holding of office."

Optimistic Thought.

Suavity will collect more bills than a dozen lawsuits.

AMERICANS SECURE MANGANESE SUPPLY

Needful for Morning Shave and Radio.

Washington.—From Paris it is announced that a United States firm has won the concession for the Tchiaturi manganese mines, biggest in the world, so America can shave in the morning with a steady, untroubled hand.

"There is a very intimate connection between Tchiaturi, deep in an arid ravine under the Caucasus snow peaks, and the cutting edge of the daily razor," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society from its headquarters at Washington.

"Razors are steel. Steel is iron. But steel also is carbon and silicon and sulphur and phosphorus and manganese; for steel is an alloy just as bronze or aluminum are alloys. Gary and Bethlehem and Pittsburgh can get iron from Minnesota and most of the 'seasoning' for their steel in the United States, but they must go abroad for much of their manganese.

Comes From Georgia, Russia.

"Georgia, not the United States commonwealth, but the Soviet republic which is federated with Russia lies along the southern slopes of the giant Caucasus mountains which cut it off from Russia like the Pyrenees cut off Spain from France. Oil is Georgia's chief mineral resource and manganese is second. Oil at Baku, on the Caspian sea, did much to build the Transcaucasian railroad from Baku to Batum, on the Black sea, back in the eighties, but manganese found use for it first.

"A few miles west of Tiflis, which is the capital of Georgia, a narrow gauge branch railroad now winds through the deep cut of the Kvirila river. Its terminal, 25 miles from the main line, is Tchiaturi, which is about 130 miles from the ports of Batum or Poti. Round about Tchiaturi are next to the largest known rich deposits of the rare earth called manganese ore. Although this region is supposed to have 200,000,000 tons awaiting the pick, Brazil is said to have a mountain of it, but this particular Brazilian deposit is so far inland that its exploitation is impracticable at present.

"Before scientists discovered that manganese would facilitate the process of making steel and before they found that a certain per cent made steel wonderfully hard, the Tchiaturi mountain district was inhabited by a few scattered herders. In prosperous times 4,000 miners now work the hills. A herder of sheep knows little about mining so at first Italian miners were imported to work the strata. But the mining is easy and comparatively safe so the Georgians soon caught on and now the great majority of workmen are natives.

Brought Theater and Hot Baths.

"Before the World war much was done to maintain good living conditions for the miners. Homes were built for them together with an institution for hot baths, so dear to the Georgian heart. Electricity came into the mountains for the mines and the villages. Manganese even brought a theater to Tchiaturi.

"When the branch railroad reached the deposits there was great rejoicing because previously all ore had to be taken over perilous mountain paths 25 miles to the main line. Seldom more than a ton could be carried by bullock cart at one time. The old Russian government built the branch line, but freight charges were so high, it is said, that they paid the railroad's cost in two years.

India Passes Georgia.

"Up to the time of the World war Georgia led the world in production of manganese except for the periods of depression in 1907 and 1908. Then its rival, India, passed it. Closing of the Bosporus in 1914 practically sealed the Georgian mines.

"The United States has always imported manganese heavily from Brazil where the mines are in Minas Geraes, about 300 miles northwest from Rio de Janeiro. During the war America developed her own manganese resources and is using them today to some extent. The principal steel-producing countries have in the past each drawn their chief manganese supplies from a different source; Germany from Georgia, England from India, where it is found in the presidency of Madras and in central India, and the United States from Brazil. Montana, the Blue Ridge mountains of Virginia, Arkansas, Colorado and our own state of Georgia, are the sources within the United States.

"Many radio fans also rely on manganese. Grades of ore coming chiefly from Philipsburg, Mont., are important constituents of the dry cell or dry battery."

Would Dignify British Who Take Poor Relief

Exeter, England.—In order to remove the stigma which the receipt of poor law relief is supposed to give to people, the bishop of Exeter suggests that these poor, honorable people should wear a special uniform and be called "king's bedesmen." He says the merit of these people should be recognized by the state in such manner as to show that, because they have served England well, England valued their services.

King's bedesmen, he says, should be admitted at a court presided over by the mayor, they should live where they like, should have an honorable place in the churches and scouts and members of the "church lads' brigade" be taught to salute them

In Memoriam.

Editor Union-Herald:—Mary Anne, daughter of William and Elizabeth Beavers, was born near Commercial Point, Pickaway county, Ohio, March 31, 1849, and departed this life February 23, 1925, nearing her 76th birthday anniversary. At this advanced age she was so well preserved until December 18, 1924, just a little over two months ago when disease attacked her.

She lived on the same farm all her life where she was contented with her home, loved her neighbors, friends and community, happy in her church and its various organizations.

She married James M. Johnson, a returned soldier and schoolmate, on February 6, 1868. To this union eleven children were born, nine of whom were reared to maturity, two dying in infancy. Sarah Elizabeth was four years old and an infant a few hours. One little grandchild was also cared for in this home for six years. The wife and mother joined the church when Rev. Kemper was pastor at Commercial Point, more than 45 years ago. She was a member of the W. C. T. U. the Foreign Missionary society and Willing Workers. She did her duty towards everything and everybody to the very last moment filling a life of service and good cheer.. This community loses one of its oldest citizens and she will be missed for her worth and genuine goodness.

She leaves nine children, 21 grandchildren, 14 great-grandchildren and many friends to mourn their loss. She delighted in all the children and loved to see them, but she was extremely glad when Vaughan would bring the twins for her to see.

Her funeral was held at the M. E. church at Commercial Point. Rev. William Zeigler, pastor, delivered the funeral sermon and Mrs. Faye Finch sang the beautiful songs that the deceased had selected. The pallbearers were Robert Johnson Jr., Vaughan, Ditrick, K. J. Leach, Joe Westerman Robert Miller and Filmore Beavers. Burial was in the Darbyville cemetery.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to thank the neighbors and friends who helped us during the illness and death of our beloved mother, to Rev. William Zeigler for his consoling words; to Mrs. Faye Finch for her singing; to A. J. Hott, undertaker, for his services and to those who gave the beautiful floral offerings.

Chicks that die mean lost profits whether they die in the shell or after they are hatched. That's why the first step toward bigger poultry profits lies in choosing the right incubators and brooders.

In Memoriam.

Editor Union-Herald:—Emma Alice, daughter of William S., and Elizabeth Oman Reber was born in Walnut township, June 11, 1888, and departed this life February 26, 1925, aged 36 years eight months and 15 days.

She was baptized in infancy by the Rev. Alonzo F. Hixon and in early life united with the Methodist Episcopal church at Hedges Chapel, where she continued a loyal worker until she transferred her membership to the Ashville Methodist Episcopal church where she remained a faithful member until summoned away by death.

Upon graduation from Ashville high school, she attended Ohio Wesleyan university at Delaware, Ohio. Emma was an ardent and loyal supporter of the county and local organizations, that fostered the need of the unfortunate and helped to make a happier country in which to live.

She was a member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and of the Woman's Foreign Missionary society at Hedges Chapel; she was also active in the work of the Grange, always ready to support the highest ideals of that organization.

Of the immediate family she leaves to mourn her departure her deeply bereaved mother, one sister, Mrs. H. M. Crites of Circleville, and one brother Homer S. Reber, with two little nieces Elizabeth Ellen and Ann Reber, of Walnut township. Emma always held unyieldingly to any principles, or course of conduct adopted; she joyously upheld all righteous causes. She loved deeply the church of our Lord, its hours of worship were a joy to her; and she loyally supported the world-wide program of the church. Emma formed many strong friendships and to her inner circle of friends she was a paragon of sincerity and honor.

Miss Emma's closest attachments were to the family circle and the home here she took a personal interest and pride in all that concerned the best influences that could be wielded.

Coconut Pulp Is Food for Tropical Babies

Honolulu.—Investigation of the properties of the pulp of young coconuts has developed that they contain all the constituents of human mothers' milk, and perhaps may be used in the tropics to take the place of mothers' milk, according to statements made before the Pan-Pacific science council here by Dr. N. P. Larsen of the Queen's hospital, Honolulu.

It developed during the meeting that several Hawaiians present had been weaned on coconut pulp, but it is believed the announcement by Doctor Larsen is the first to be made of the actual chemical properties of the pulp and milk of coconuts.

It was pointed out that the milk of the water buffalo, being five times as rich as cow's milk, might be added to dehydrated pulp of young coconuts and served in place of mothers' milk in feeding children when necessary.

Deep interest has been taken in the possibility of this dehydration, and several mainland scientists have been asked to experiment further and report to the Pan-Pacific Research institute here.

Sleeping Sickness Held Responsible for Crime

London.—Because "sleeping sickness" has so changed the character of children and made some of them criminals, the authorities are considering the building of special schools for these youngsters. Children who have suffered from the disease, it is said, not only change their character, but deteriorate physically and lose control of their emotions.

Reporting to the metropolitan asylums board, Dr. Charles Glyn says: "It seems that the disease may pass through a phase in which physical changes are the only prominent feature, so that crimes may be committed for which the offender is not fully responsible."

Herodes' Subnormal Son.

Herodes, to overcome the extraordinary dullness of his son Atticus, educated along with him twenty-four little slaves of his own age. He gave each the name of the letter of the Greek alphabet. His son, in order to play with them, had to learn the alphabet to call their names.

AMUSEMENTS

James Cruze's latest Paramount picture, "Merton of the Movies which opened at the Met theater last night for a three days' run, was made famous first as a Saturday Evening Post story by Harry Leon Wilson. It was hailed as a masterpiece of satire and shortly afterward appeared as a play by George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly. Its success on the stage was instantaneous and phenomenal. For more than a year it delighted audiences at the Cort theater in New York and was later sent on tour where it duplicated its success in some of the largest cities of the United States. It was inevitable that it should find its way to the screen. "Merton" is ideal motion picture material.

Too much praise can hardly be given to Glenn Hunter for his admirable portrayal of Merton. His work is the outstanding feature of the picture. Mr. Hunter shows us what happens to a small town youth who goes to Hollywood, determined to become a movie star. His adventures constitute a heart-gripping epic of pathos and drama, richly woven with typically American humor and a beautiful love story. Poor Merton! The harder he tries the louder the audience laughs! "Merton of the Movies" is one of the greatest comedy drama burlesques ever flashed on the screen.

The other members of the exceptional cast include Viola Dana, featured; De Witt Jennings, Charles Ogle Ethel Wales and Gale Henry.

BUSINESS; CANNERS TO SPEED UP SHIPMENTS

George P. Dugan, traffic manager of the Sears & Nichols Canning Co., Chillicothe, and Howard A. Orr, vice president of the Winorr Canning Co., Circleville, have been appointed representatives of the Ohio Canners' Association of the Ohio Valley shippers' advisory board, according to an announcement made by Secretary Roy Irons of the canners' organization yesterday.

So extensive has the canning industry in Ohio become, it was found advisable to have it represented in the shippers' organization.

Every year several million cases of canned sweet corn, peas, tomatoes, spinach, beans, sauer kraut, and other vegetables and fruits are sent out from Ohio, shipments going to all sections of the United States.

With canners represented on the committee, it is believed that the railroads will be able to provide in ample time, sufficient equipment for the shipping of Ohio canned goods, especially during the rush after the canning season closes in the fall.

KEEPING WELL

GOITER IN COLORADO

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

AS SOON as a new method of treatment or a new and better reason for the existence of a disease is announced, scientific men all over the country begin to investigate conditions in different localities.

The interest in goiter in Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin and other states, has caused a study of this condition everywhere. In a recent issue of "United States Public Health Reports," Dr. Robert Olsen, surgeon of the United States public health service, presents a report on the prevalence of goiter in Colorado. Doctor Olsen was sent to this state at the request of the Colorado board of health to determine the extent of goiter in that state and, if possible, to ascertain the cause.

A survey of the Denver city schools showed that out of 9,656 girls between the ages of eight and twenty-two, 2,643, or 27 per cent, had some kind of enlargement of the thyroid gland. A Red Cross survey in eight cities showed that out of 1,762 children, or 825 boys and 937 girls, between the ages of nine and twenty, thyroid enlargement was found in 53 per cent of the boys and 73 per cent of the girls. In Colorado Springs, 38 per cent of the boys and 44 per cent of the girls had enlarged thyroids. The total results for the entire state showed about the same proportions.

As usually happens when special attention is given to any particular disease, it was found that goiter was much more common than had been generally supposed. On account of lack of time and money, the survey was confined to the cities, no attempt being made to find out how prevalent goiter is in the country districts or whether it is more or less common there than in the towns.

Regarding the cause of goiter, it is now pretty generally agreed that most of simple enlargements of the thyroid are caused by lack of iodine, either in the food or the drinking water. Naturally, the easiest way to remedy this condition is to provide enough iodine for the body. Iodine is found in sea water, sea weeds, and sea foods of all kinds. It is lacking, both in the soil and in the water, in localities far removed from the sea coast. Perhaps this need of the human body for a certain amount of iodine is due to the fact that all life came originally from the sea and we still need some of the elements furnished by the sea to keep us strong and healthy.

Perhaps You Have Heard Them.

Harold had often heard the poem, "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star." Last summer we visited Aunt Louise, who lived in the country. In the evening we would all sit on the porch, and, of course, hear all the night noises, such as frogs, crickets, etc. One evening Harold sat gazing intently at the sky for some time, then, suddenly looking at his mother, he exclaimed, "Mother, just hear the stars twinkle."—Chicago American.

Tea Made Harmful.

Tea, "the cup that cheers but does not inebriate," must in fact also be reckoned among the very serious and deleterious intoxicants, though of course only when grossly misused. In Ireland especially, and also in the United States, there are many persons addicted to the excessive drinking of tea which is not brewed as it should be, but is permitted to steep and soak for hours and even for days, until some very harmful ingredients are extracted from the leaves, the effects of which upon the nerves and brain are in the end disastrous. There are thousands of occupants of insane asylums whose minds were wrecked by such indulgence.—Exchange.

FRIEDMAN'S

APPAREL FOR WOMEN

CONTRAST TO MARK COOLIDGE INAUGURAL

Parade Over Historic Pennsylvania Avenue To Capitol.

Washington, D. C., March 1.—The crowding memories that hover over Pennsylvania avenue will be stirred more by contrast than by new splendor or pageantry when President Coolidge steps out of the White House to renew his covenant of faith as the chosen leader of the nation.

The President will be carried swiftly over the route to the Capitol that many great men before him traveled on similar errand; about him will be the jingle of the cavalry trappings, the clatter of trotting hoofs, the glitter of uniforms and other symbols of the great significance of this four-year milestone in American history.

Yet on his short journey to remake his oath of high service and on the westward return up the broad street, the man about whom it all centers will perceive evidences on every hand of the policy of sober frugality he has himself marked out.

Back through the years as Presidents have come and gone, the inaugural grew from small beginnings into a mighty spectacle that symbolized the swelling power of the nation.

Each succeeding ascension to the Presidency saw some new addition to the pomp and circumstance of the ceremonies. The return march to the White House became a mighty parade, led by a host of soldiery; participated in by a vast column of citizenry.

Here, once in four years, marched the stribling future commanders of American armies and naval armadas, cadets from West Point, middies from Annapolis. Here marched regiments of foot soldiers, sailors and marines in honor of a new commander-in-chief. Battery after battery of rumbling guns rolled past the tens of thousands, gathered from every part of the country to witness the great event. No cost was spared that it should be a fitting tribute to the new chieftain.

But a new day has come; a new policy to govern all the show and parade has been laid down. It is the decree of the President himself that while his inauguration shall be observed with due decorum and with such ceremony as befits the installation of the head of a mighty state, it shall not lead to lavish expenditures nor drain the public purse needlessly.

For that reason there will be no long haul transportation of troops to march in the parade. The cadet and middy regiments will be conspicuous by their absence. Only those military and naval organizations will take part that are stationed close to Washington and have their own transportation.

The Harding inauguration of four years ago marked a swing of the pendulum away from a period of lavish display and pageantry which would have staggered the fathers had it been suggested in the days of the Republic5s infancy. In that day it even was declared to savor too much of monarchy when Livingston turned to the crowd after the Father of His Country had taken his first presidential oat and cried "Long live George Washington."

It was in New York that Washington became the first President. When he arrived there from his home at Mt. Vernon, there was a delegation of citizens with a barge of state to take him across the river from New Jersey to Manhattan, while a crowd of thousands awaited to do him honor. His advisers declared it unthinkable that he should be sworn in in private. Accordingly, on the balcony of the Federal Building, the first Chief Justice administered the oath to the first President, and the crowd below took up the shout of "Long live George Washington," with a roar that was heard and echoed on the Jersey shore.

Inaugural balls began with that first inauguration. Washington himself led the minuet with Miss Van Zandt, of New York, and danced subsequently with Mrs. Livingston. That ball was an occasion of splendor and brilliancy.

Thomas Jefferson was the first President inaugurated in Washington. That was on March 4, 1801, when Pennsylvania avenue was little more than a strip of country road.

Certain accounts say Jefferson walked to the Capitol and others that he rode a horse, accompanied by a small guard of militia, cavalry and friends. One old record says, "a vast concourse" of 1,200 citizens stood in the orchards and gardens bordering the avenues to see him pass by.

Monroe in 1817 was satisfied with an escort of a body of citizens on horseback. At Andrew Jackson's inauguration in 1829 Pennsylvania avenue had its first glimpse of the popular enthusiasm that would accompany the great pageants of the future. Daniel Webster said of it:

"Never was such a crowd seen here before. There must have been 8,000 people along the line of march."

Van Buren in 1837 had a "splendid escort" for those days, and 20,000 spectators lined the avenue. The President's carriage attracted as much attention as he himself, for it was made of wood from the hull of the victorious American frigate of war Constitution, and built at the expense of the New York democracy.

The parade at General Harrison's inauguration in 1841 was as picturesque as the man himself. He rode to the Capitol on horseback and drove back to the White House in a coach presented to him by the whigs of Baltimore. Numerous "log cabin" floats were in the parade. There were 75,000 spectators.

Polk had a mixed escort of military organizations, his Cabinet and students. Zachary Taylor was inaugurated on Monday, March 5, 1849, and rode to the Capitol in a carriage drawn by four prancing horses. His military escort was particularly large and imposing.

Lincoln's large escort in 1861 was exclusively military and every soldier who marched before, beside and behind his carriage held his musket at the ready. Nine tenths of the spectators were soldiers, all armed and on watch for danger. At Lincoln's second inauguration in 1865 the escort was larger and the watch more vigilant.

Cleveland's inauguration in 1885, which changed the ruling party, brought a noteworthy pageant with a military display such as had not been seen since 1865. Benjamin Harrison's inaugural was not so elaborate, but at both of McKinley's inaugurations the processions were extensive and imposing.

Roosevelt's inauguration saw 30,000 men in the procession, with former Rough Riders as his personal escort.

A splendid spectacle likewise attended the inauguration of Taft, and when the Democrats again came into power with Wilson they sought to outdo all that had gone before.

Wilson's second inauguration, on the eve of American entry into the World War, was less elaborate, and Harding's saw a return to a simplicity even more severe than that prescribed by Coolidge for 1925.

Magpie Superstitions.

The magpie has a lot of stories connected with his career. What I am going to tell you seems like nonsense, but it is a straight fact. The "mag" of magpie was originally Marguerite or Margaret, simmering down into a nickname, just as a lot of human Margarets are affectionately called "Mag" by their friends. Of the magpie it is said that to see one is a sign of bad luck, two good luck, three death, four a wedding.—Exchange.

"Codfish Aristocracy."

The "sacred codfish" is an emblem of an important activity in Massachusetts. The expression "codfish aristocracy" was first used by Senator Butler in the United States senate, July 6, 1850. Referring to New England influences in politics, he said, "We should regret it as somewhat strange if we should require a codfish aristocracy to keep us in order." The term is now sometimes applied to those who make vulgar display of recently acquired wealth.

Her Rebellious

By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

THE business of Amos Bullard had prospered exceedingly of late. So he built a country house and employed architects and decorators at fancy prices. A young man named Mowray, an interior decorator, had come down to Mount Pleasant, the name of the new mansion and its attached estate, to practice his artistic skill upon the spacious rooms of the great house.

Now among other enterprises which Amos had on hand was the selecting of a husband for his daughter Margaret. In this enterprise he was assisted by his wife with great ability. In fact, Mrs. Amos took the lead in this particular speculation. Margaret was their only child. She must marry not only a fortune, but a fortune attached to a young man of a social station higher than the one hitherto occupied by the Bullards.

Margaret was of an artistic turn of mind and was always hanging about watching the decorators at work. A harmless eccentricity, thought Mrs. Amos, and then, to be interested in art was, really, rather good form. The first that Mrs. Bullard suspected that something was wrong was when Tom Mowray began to exhibit a great and growing profusion of daisies in his decorations. One of Mrs. Bullard's friends calling, and being shown the work in progress one day, remarked: "What a lot of marguerites your decorator uses."

"What, the daisies?" asked Mrs. Amos, whose early education had been neglected.

"Yes—marguerites, we call them."

"Marguerites. Margaret," mused Mrs. Amos, who was a mighty shrewd person; "and Margaret always hanging about watching that young man work!"

That night she said to her husband: "Amos, I suspect something." And she told him what and why.

"Nonsense," said Amos. "Marie is too sensible a girl to fall in love with a mere decorator. However, I'll bundle him out of the house tomorrow. The impudent scalawag."

"Let us call in Margie," said Mrs. Amos, "and find out right now how far this thing has gone."

Margaret was called in. She acknowledged at once that she was in love with Tom Mowray and was going to marry him, if he should ever ask her, and she rather thought he would. Margie was surprised. Heretofore her will had been law to her father and mother. What did they mean by this undutiful conduct?

But the rebellious parents carried the day. Tom was discharged the next morning and Margaret packed off to visit a great-aunt in Oswego. Amos was recounting to one of his business associates this little family incident.

"Tom Mowray!" cried Slater, the business associate aforesaid. "Why, are you sure he is not a son of Old Tom Mowray? Old Tom had a son who went in for art, and his name was the same as his father's."

Amos gasped. Had he, after all, made the great mistake of his life? Old Tom Mowray was that retired capitalist, that possessor of great wealth, known all over the world. To see Margie the wife of a son of Old Tom would indeed be the crowning of a successful life for Amos. Amos was a man of action. Action, and prompt action, accounted for his present wealth. He took a West Shore train and went up the Hudson to where the feudal castle in which Old Tom Mowray had settled down towered above the woods and the swift-running river.

Old Tom received him coldly, merely bowed and waited for his visitor to speak, glancing from time to time at the card which Amos had sent in. Amos was a little disconcerted; but business was business. "I have come, sir," said Amos, "to speak with you upon a matter which, I apprehend, concerns both our families." Tom motioned for Amos to take a chair. They both sat down. Amos told Old Tom of the young decorator, of his daughter and of their having fallen in love with each other. "Now, sir," went on Amos, "I believe that this young man is your son and namesake. I have been so informed. While undoubtedly your son and my daughter are very much in love with each other, I was loath to have the matter go on any further without consulting you."

Old Tom had watched Amos closely as he told his tale. When it was ended the great capitalist said slowly: "Mr. Bullard, you have been misinformed. I have only one son. He is much given to dabbling in art. It is true. But his name is John and he is at present in Italy. Also he has been married two years." The mingled emotion which surged and tumbled together in the breast of Amos caused his face to assume such a peculiar expression that Old Tom—for once in his life—really laughed. Then he said: "The young man you refer to is my nephew. His fortune will be sufficient and he will make a very suitable husband for your daughter. In fact, as the young people fled to me and asked my advice, I have taken the liberty to have them joined in holy wedlock. Tom!" The door opened and in came young Tom and Margie—both blushing, but happy. Amos gave them his blessing—got busy with the long-distance and had Mrs. Amos telephone hers. The rebellious parents had surrendered, but as young Tom had a couple of million coming to him, and was a nephew of Old Tom, they were glorious in their defeat.

Evidently Had Lost Them

"Tom didn't blow his brains out last night when you rejected him," said one of the crowd to another girl. "He came 'round and proposed to me." "Indeed," remarked the other, "he must have got rid of them some other way."

Playgoer s of this section will be privileged to witness one of the most enthusiastically praised plays of the generation when "Seventh Heaven" is presented at the Hartman theater Columbus for one week beginning Monday, March 2. This is the newest dramatic success of John Golden who blended the fun and heart throbs of "Lightnin," "Three Wise Fools," "The First Year," "Dear Me" and other plays that rank with the best loved offerings of the American stage because of their wholesomeness and gentle humanity.

"Seventh Heaven" is different from their earlier Golden plays in that its scenes are laid in Paris. The other have been typically American usually dealing with home life and quaint, everyday characters. But the same formula of clean fun and gentle pathos has been followed. The principal characters are Diane, a neglected waif of Paris slums and Chico, a swaggering street washer. Thru their suffering in the crucible of the great war the pair are lifted from squalor and ignorance to heights of great happiness in religious understanding and true love. Their elevation to the "Seventh Heaven" of bliss gives the play its title. The war serves merely as a background and is in no sense a "war play." Ann Forrest, blonde beauty of filmland plays Diane and Louis D'Arclay a young Belgian actor from Mme. Rejane's repertoire company and theater Odeon, Paris, is Chico.

Matinees are announced for Wednesday and Saturday during the Columbus engagement. Mail orders will be given careful attention.

Where the Spike Went.

Answering a question as to what became of the gold spike that was driven into the last rail laid in building the Union Pacific railroad on its completion in 1869, a subscriber writes: "It was first photographed, and then melted up and recast into very small spikes about 15-16ths of an inch long, and they were distributed to the more prominent railroad men present. Among the recipients was my father, now deceased, from whom I received one of the photographs mentioned and a miniature gold spike. There are probably very few of these now in existence. The original spike was full size and engraved with the officers' names and titles. The miniature was engraved with the date May 10, 1869, and the words: 'Last spike of the Pacific Railway,' and 'Presented by D. Hewes.'"—Outlook.

Wanted to Give the Acid Test

By MARTHA WILLIAMS

(Copyright.)

NOTHING would have happened but for a gate left ajar. Ruth Ware and Fanny Lane, both well-brought-up young persons, felt a stir of thief-blood at sight of it. This was, you see, their second day in the country—it had gone to their heads, setting up primal riots in their starved souls. Besides, the strawberries were so tempting—blushing ripe scarlet up through their green leaves there in the morning sunshine.

"It—it won't hurt to smell the heavenly things!" Ruth cried softly, laying her face on the soft green leaves with an ecstatic inhalation. "It would be wicked to leave this—it's simply crying to be eaten." Fanny hung back, popping a big red oval into her mouth, with a gasp of delight over the taste of it. Ruth began mentally to say: "Oh! We mustn't!" but stopped, hearing a cracked voice crying to them: "Hey, you pickers! Show me yer feet! Can't have you clompin' up and down—mash more berries than yer pickings all day's pay for."

"We are not—" Ruth began—Fanny silenced her with a look, and called back: "We both wear number threes! What does the job pay?"

"Depends on you yerself. Two pence er basket, take run er the vines—and no skippin's to pick only big uns," came back. "But how—come ye ter be here? I ain't told nobody to call in hands—though I sorter need 'em. My gals, Sue and Sally, run off and got married last night—took er mean advantage right in the height of the crop. Sent my old woman to fetch 'em back—and they won't come onless I'll 'gree ter take on the pair o' rascals they've hitched up with. So I've called up Tobe Wilson, the shippin' feller, ter come and pick the berries—he needs 'em ter fill out er kyar. Was hit him that sent ye?"

"No! A little bird told us." Fanny laughed.

"Hop to it!" cried the berry owner. "Come git baskets. Up at the shed, ye know—the old shoestring's thar—she does the packing and keeps tally. Ye shall have a full day—no matter whut Wilson says. He's comin' out with a truckload."

"Reckon he can be Luther Wilson?" Ruth asked in panic.

Fanny laughed softly. "I hope so."

"Why?" Ruth whispered.

"O! I want to give him the acid test. Be sure he won't know us from his grandmother, in kahki knickers and palmetto hats." Remember, even in the office he was never more than dimly conscious we were not machines."

"All set, Pop Tipton!" he roared cheerily. "I raided the high school, teachers and everything—brought baskets, crates, sorters—lunch is to come later."

Pop grinned happily, mulled around among the rioters, sorted out the splay-footed and doomed them to shed work, made the old shoestring, his wife, give place to the professor of mathematics as tally keeper, and said impressively to Wilson: "Say, Luther, them two volunteers is got to be kept on—they come to my help when it seemed like help thar wasn't none."

Luther nodded, never looking at the pair. Ruth looked at Fanny amazed. Half a year in the open, away from office work, had surely made a new man of him. He had been exacting there, likewise impatient and sharp of speech, never anything worse.

By eleven o'clock Ruth, one embodied ache, slouched under the shed, saying as she set down two filled baskets: "We're quitting—my partner and I. Checks, please! Numbers one and two."

Wilson was within hearing. She did not notice his faint start as he overheard. But instantly he flung at her: "Quitting isn't allowed on this job. Go rest ten minutes—there in the shade—get your second wind—it will last you to the finish."

Amazedly she obeyed, Fanny lagging behind, stared to see it. But she also took refuge from the sun under thick grape leafage, where truly enough strength and courage came back. So the pair worked on, less feverishly, but more effectually.

Picking was over by three o'clock—the truck laden with crates, the pickers straggling joyously homeward with money in both pockets. A fleet of flivvers had come for them, mostly from their homes. But Ruth and Fanny were laggards. Wilson had not spoken to them as though they were other than strangers, and they did not wish to thrust themselves upon his consciousness. After a long rest they would go as they had come, afoot, enjoying all the wonders of the countryside. Only three miles to Grandma Ware's small, tidy place.

The last flivver had gone. Pop and the old shoestring were at home, quarreling with their enlarged family. Sighing, the girls rose up—but stopped dead at what confronted them. Luther Wilson, as sunburned, as berry-stained as themselves, but with the courtliest air in the world, smiling and saying: "I'm so glad you could wait for me—my car is here—where shall it take you?"

"Heaven, if you please," Ruth said, yawning. He smiled at her, saying: "I found that right here. Since we can't stay, let's go—and take it with us." To which Fanny vouchsafed a hearty amen.

Want of Perception.

The devil has no stancher ally than want of perception.—Philip H. Wickstead.

Value of Varnish Long Known.

Varnish as a preservative, made from gums, is by no means modern, for a so-called varnish was entombed in wrappings around forms when mummies were first laid away in ancient Egypt. And in the Nineteenth century B. C. temples on Thebes were decorated with paintings in which varnish had its part. The magnetic quality found in amber was long ago supposed to lend richness of tone to violins which were varnished with a mixture of amber and alcohol. Zanzibar gum is the nearest approach to amber in clearness, and often beautiful bugs are found embedded within its clear substance. Such a curious thing as the tail of a chipmunk, with each hair spread as if to the breeze, has been found embedded in Zanzibar gum.
